Accommodations for Students with Disabilities

• Students with disabilities are eligible for accommodations under Rehab. Act of 1973 and ADA. Some adult schools do 504 plans for students.

• Like Community Colleges, and Universities, curriculum cannot be modified although many students do receive special accommodations in classes.
Building Basic Academic Skills

For students who leave high school without a diploma because they are missing some units or just didn’t want to continue for one reason or another, there is an opportunity for completing their diploma, preparing for and taking the GED and/or other high school equivalency classes.

Adult Basic Education and Adult Secondary Education classes assist students in developing reading, writing, and math skills to help them better prepare for work and/or vocational training programs or college.
Cost of Education and Training

- Many adult school students receive services through Department of Rehab, which can fund career training programs such as Administrative Assistant, CNA, Dental Assistant, EMT, and Adults with Disabilities programs.
- Basic Skills classes and High School diploma classes are free.
- Programs tend to be reasonably priced. Some schools offer Pell grants, scholarships and/or partial scholarships.
Community Colleges and Adult Schools are working together to bridge services for students and to cross-reference students as appropriate. This makes the system work well as CC may refer students with special learning needs to an adult school for remedial classes and adult schools work to insure that all students wanting to start attending a CC are able to prepare and then get assistance in making the transition.

All Adult Schools and Community Colleges have a Transition Specialist that works with students to address their education goals and to ensure that they have supports and services needed to be successful.
