Practicing good daily oral hygiene is an important part of maintaining good overall health.

When your loved one is struggling with other health problems, their oral health can become a lower priority, but good daily oral hygiene and regular dental visits help your loved one avoid tooth pain, infection, and tooth loss.

Your loved one may not be able to brush and floss by themselves and might need your help. As a caregiver, you play an important role in helping your loved one keep their teeth and gums healthy. As a result, this can improve their overall health and sometimes behaviors.

Here are some tips for helping your loved one maintain a healthy smile:

- Set a daily brushing and flossing routine. Some people do better at different times of the day and in settings other than at the bathroom sink.
- Schedule at least one dental appointment for your loved one every year.
- Encourage them to eat well, replacing sugary drinks and foods with healthy options.
- If your loved one has dentures, help or remind them to remove and clean their dentures every morning and night.

If your loved one can brush and floss on their own:

- Talk with them about the importance of keeping their mouth healthy.
- Check that they have an easy-to-handle toothbrush without frayed bristles. Be sure they are replacing their toothbrush every three months.
- Offer to make dental appointments for your loved one and drive them to their appointments.

If your loved one needs help taking care of their mouth:

- Try the “tell-show-do” technique — When brushing and flossing your loved one’s teeth explain (tell) what each step is before you start. Show your loved one how you are going to brush and floss their teeth. Do each step exactly how you explain it so there are no surprises.
- Find the best place and time where you will both be comfortable brushing and flossing.
- Make dental appointments for your loved one and drive them to their appointments.
